

MEYER LOFT

Designed by Michael Davis, the same architect who outfitted the Eagle Warehouse Loft (see page 15), the Meyer Loft (named for its current resident) is one of those otherworldly abodes that is the province of the very wealthy. And though we love to hate the filthy rich, we'll admit that actually, we're just jealous. In addition to a 4,500-square-foot loft, the home includes a rooftop deck and a lounging space inside a crow's-nest turret. The spot was designed so that the owner, an investment nabob, could impress business associates, but we're still waiting for our invitations.—BC
